

PRAGUE INTEGRATION

Workshop Proposal
Men's Mental Health Month — Option A

The Weight of the World: Men, Meaning & the Modern World

Panel Discussion & Interactive Workshop
Prepared for Hellenic Bottling Company (Coca-Cola)

About the Session

Men today carry more than tasks and deadlines — they carry expectation, responsibility and an often unspoken search for meaning.

The Weight of the World is an honest exploration of what men are carrying — as providers, partners, fathers and professionals — and how the modern world has quietly raised the bar on all of it.

The session looks at where this weight comes from, how it shows up in daily life, and what it actually means to find meaning and purpose without being crushed by expectation.

Rather than offering easy answers, the session opens space for reflection — helping participants recognise their own load, understand its sources, and begin to set it down where they can.

The discussion is designed to be relevant to men and women alike, with partners and allies warmly welcome.

Session Format

Client	Hellenic Bottling Company (Coca-Cola)
Format	Online
Duration	60–90 minutes
Structure	15–20 min presentation + 35–40 min panel discussion and live Q&A
Audience	Men and women — partners and allies welcome
Presenters	Fredrik L. — Men's Coach & Leadership Trainer Jamie M. — Psychologist, Mental Health Counsellor & Trainer
Alternative Presenter	Daniel Espitia and Benedikt Ričny — Prague Integration Counsellors & Trainers
Investment	Price available upon request

Workshop Content

The Weight We Carry

For many men, responsibility for others has quietly become heavier than responsibility for themselves.

We will explore:

- The provider instinct as both identity and burden
- How responsibility for others can outweigh responsibility for oneself
- The gap between what men were taught to carry and what they can actually sustain
- Recognising the difference between a heavy load and an unsustainable one

Meaning, Work & the Modern World

Modern work culture has blurred the line between contribution and self-worth, making it harder to know where meaning actually comes from.

We will discuss:

- How always-on work culture ties self-worth to output and achievement
- Why achievement can start to feel hollow when it's the only measure of meaning
- The search for purpose beyond productivity and provision
- Practical: small ways to reconnect with what actually feels meaningful

Carrying It Together

Much of this weight is carried alone, and rarely named out loud.

We will explore:

- Why unspoken pressure so often goes unnamed
- How that pressure shows up as irritability, withdrawal or overwork
- What it looks like to share the load without losing a sense of strength
- A key message throughout the session: the weight is real — and it isn't meant to be carried alone

Panel Discussion & Live Q&A

Following the presentation, participants will be invited into an open panel discussion with the presenters, grounded in the themes of weight, meaning and pressure raised in the session.

The conversation will focus on real-life situations around:

- Work and pressure
- Relationships and communication
- Fatherhood and family expectations
- Emotional expression
- Stress and burnout
- Asking for support
- Building sustainable resilience

Participants will have the opportunity to submit questions before or during the session.

Suggested questions include:

- “How do I open up when my partner isn't used to that version of me?”
- “How do I protect my kids from my stress without shutting down completely?”
- “What does ‘getting help’ actually look like for a man who doesn't do therapy?”
- “How do I know if I'm just tired or something is actually wrong?”

PRAGUE INTEGRATION

Workshop Proposal
Men's Mental Health Month — Option B

Still Standing: How Men Can Thrive Without Depleting

Panel Discussion & Interactive Workshop
Prepared for Hellenic Bottling Company (Coca-Cola)

About the Session

Men are often expected to keep going — at work, at home, in relationships, and as providers and fathers — even when their energy and emotional resources are running low.

Still Standing is a practical and honest conversation about what happens when resilience becomes constant endurance.

The session explores the pressures men face today, the changing expectations around work, fatherhood and masculinity, and the often-overlooked ways stress and depletion show up.

Rather than focusing only on problems, the session provides practical tools for recognising depletion earlier, recovering more effectively, and building a more sustainable way of showing up for work, family and relationships.

The discussion is designed to be relevant to men and women alike, with partners and allies warmly welcome.

Session Format

Client	Hellenic Bottling Company (Coca-Cola)
Format	Online
Duration	60–90 minutes
Structure	15–20 min presentation + 35–40 min panel discussion and live Q&A
Audience	Men and women — partners and allies welcome
Presenters	Fredrik L. — Men's Coach & Leadership Trainer Jamie M. — Psychologist, Mental Health Counsellor & Trainer
Alternative Presenter	Daniel Espitia and Benedikt Ričny — Prague Integration Counsellors & Trainers
Investment	Price available upon request

Workshop Content

The Shifting Provider Role

For many men, being a provider is deeply connected to identity, responsibility and self-worth. At the same time, expectations around what it means to be a partner and father are changing.

We will explore:

- The provider instinct as both a strength and a potential trap
- How expectations around being a “good father” have changed
- The gap between the father many men experienced growing up and the father they want to be today
- How changing roles can create pressure, uncertainty and a sense of never quite doing enough

Work, Worth & Running on Empty

Modern work culture can make it difficult to recognise when normal tiredness has become something more serious.

We will discuss:

- How work expectations have expanded through always-on culture and constant performance pressure
- Why men often respond to stress by pushing through rather than signalling that something is wrong
- The difference between being tired and being depleted
- How productivity, achievement and self-worth can become intertwined
- Practical strategies for micro-recovery rather than waiting until a holiday or burnout forces a complete stop

Loneliness in Plain Sight & Fitting Into a New World

Loneliness does not always look like isolation. For many men, emotional disconnection can appear as overwork, irritability, withdrawal or simply staying busy.

We will explore:

- Common patterns of loneliness that men may not immediately recognise
- How unexpressed stress can show up through irritability, withdrawal, overworking or emotional shutdown
- The cost of constantly trying to fit into expectations of how a man “should” behave
- What a healthier and more sustainable version of strength can look like
- A key message throughout the session: you are not broken — you may simply be under-resourced

Panel Discussion & Live Q&A

Following the presentation, participants will be invited into an open panel discussion with the presenters.

The conversation will focus on real-life situations around:

- Work and pressure
- Relationships and communication
- Fatherhood and family expectations
- Emotional expression
- Stress and burnout
- Asking for support
- Building sustainable resilience

Participants will have the opportunity to submit questions before or during the session.

Suggested questions include:

- “How do I open up when my partner isn't used to that version of me?”
- “How do I protect my kids from my stress without shutting down completely?”
- “What does ‘getting help’ actually look like for a man who doesn't do therapy?”
- “How do I know if I'm just tired or something is actually wrong?”

PRAGUE INTEGRATION

Workshop Proposal
Men's Mental Health Month — Option C

From Provider to Person: Redefining What It Means to Be a Man Today

Panel Discussion & Interactive Workshop
Prepared for Hellenic Bottling Company (Coca-Cola)

About the Session

For generations, being a good man has largely meant being a good provider — reliable, capable, always able to deliver. But what happens when that single role is no longer enough to define who a man is?

From Provider to Person is a conversation about identity beyond function — about what it means to be seen, valued and whole as a person, not only as a role someone fulfils.

The session explores how expectations of masculinity are shifting, why the provider identity can become limiting even when it's a source of pride, and what a fuller, more sustainable sense of self can look like.

Rather than rejecting the value of the provider role, the session invites participants to expand it — to make room for the person underneath.

The discussion is designed to be relevant to men and women alike, with partners and allies warmly welcome.

Session Format

Client	Hellenic Bottling Company (Coca-Cola)
Format	Online
Duration	60–90 minutes
Structure	15–20 min presentation + 35–40 min panel discussion and live Q&A
Audience	Men and women — partners and allies welcome
Presenters	Fredrik L. — Men's Coach & Leadership Trainer Jamie M. — Psychologist, Mental Health Counsellor & Trainer
Alternative Presenter	Daniel Espitia and Benedikt Ričny — Prague Integration Counsellors & Trainers
Investment	Price available upon request

Workshop Content

From Provider to Person

The provider role is often a genuine source of pride — but it can quietly become the only measure of a man's worth.

We will explore:

- The provider role as a source of pride — and its limits as a sole identity
- What gets left out when “being useful” becomes the main measure of worth
- The gap between the man someone was taught to be and the person they actually are
- Recognising identity beyond output, role and responsibility

Rewriting the Rules of Manhood

Expectations of masculinity are shifting faster than many men have language for.

We will discuss:

- How expectations of masculinity are shifting, and why that can feel disorienting
- Why change can feel like pressure rather than freedom without the right support
- The cost of measuring yourself against a definition of manhood that no longer fits
- Practical: small steps toward defining strength and success on your own terms

Being Seen, Being Supported

Redefining identity can feel isolating without the right conversations to make sense of it.

We will explore:

- Why redefining identity can feel isolating without the right conversations
- How unspoken uncertainty can show up as withdrawal, irritability or over-functioning
- What it means to be supported as a whole person, not just as someone who provides
- A key message throughout the session: you are allowed to be more than what you do for others

Panel Discussion & Live Q&A

Following the presentation, participants will be invited into an open panel discussion with the presenters, grounded in the themes of identity and redefining manhood raised in the session.

The conversation will focus on real-life situations around:

- Work and pressure
- Relationships and communication
- Fatherhood and family expectations
- Emotional expression
- Stress and burnout
- Asking for support
- Building sustainable resilience

Participants will have the opportunity to submit questions before or during the session.

Suggested questions include:

- “How do I open up when my partner isn't used to that version of me?”
- “How do I protect my kids from my stress without shutting down completely?”
- “What does ‘getting help’ actually look like for a man who doesn't do therapy?”
- “How do I know if I'm just tired or something is actually wrong?”